PRINCE AND PRESIDENT. DINNER FOR BATTENBERG.

Visitor Leaves Capital-His Tribute to the Head of This Republic.

Washington, Nov. 6.-Honored by the President with an invitation to lunch informally at the White House, Rear Admiral Prince Louis of Eattenberg kept his special train waiting threequarters of an hour this afternoon while the President engaged him in a long personal conresistion. The White House luncheon was not on the programme, and was an entirely persona! compliment to Admiral Prince Louis and his royal nephew, Prince Alexander, a midshipman on the Drake. In the morning Prince Louis visited Mount Vernen, making the trip down the Potomac River on the United States dispatch best Dolphin, commanded by Commander John bbons, who will soon go to the British capital as naval attache of the American Embassy. Leaving the embassy about 8:30 o'clock the prince, accompanied by his personal staff and Captain Ryan, the naval attache of the embessy, drove to the Washington Navy Yard. There a rear admiral's salute of thirteen guns was given in his honor, and he was welcomed by the commandant, Captain Leutze. On the boat landing to meet him was Mr. Bacon, the Assistant Secretary of State, and at the gangway to greet him as he came over the side was Captain Gibbons. On board the Dolphin was a party of about fifty, including Rear Admirals Evans and Brownson, Rear Admiral Capps, chief constructor of the navy, and the commanding officers of the British squadron.

Figing the pennants of Rear Admiral Prince Louis and Rear Admiral Evans, the Dolphin got under way promptly at 9 o'clock. At Mount Vernon the party was met at the landing by the superintendent of the grounds, who conducted them through the home of the first President. As they came to the tomb each person bared his head, while Prince Louis went up to the sepulchre and reverently stood in silence for a few mements. Upon leaving Mount Vernon an ivy plant was presented to the prince, a sprout from the plant which grows about the tomb of Washington. "I shall treasure this and take it to my home in England," the prince said, "as a souvenir of this interesting morning."

In order to reach the White House for lunchcon the prince made the return trip on a special trolley car, accompanied by his flag lieutenant and Rear Admiral Brownson. The prince went first to the British Embassy to take leave of the British Ambassador and lady Durand, whose guest he has been while in Washington, and a few minutes later, accompanied by his nephew, Prince Alexander, went to the White House, where they were the personal guests of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt at an informal luncheon. Nothing has pleased the two distinguished visitors more since their arrival in this country than the two hours and a half they spent with the President and his family this afternoon. The President is sending to the King Louis, which will be delivered when the prince J. G. Morgan, Comedian, Alleges Breach of a return personal message by Admiral Prince next visits London.

From the White House the two princes rode to the station in an automobile, where they were joined by the other British officers and Rear Admirals Evans and Brownson, and started on a special train for Annapolis, Md., at R-15 o'clock.

Before his departure for Annapolis Prince Louis said to the correspondent of "The London Morning Post":

I have thoroughly enjoyed my too brief visit to Washington, and I appreciate highly the courtesy, cordiality and kindness that have been shown us by the President, members of the Cabinet and officers of the army and navy. I came to American waters as the commander of Cabinet and officers of the army and havy. I came to American waters as the commander of a British squadron simply to make a friendly visit, and the great cordiality with which we have been received I take not as personal to myself, but rather as a compliment to the British navy, and as indicating the mutual respect and good fellowship that exist between Great Britain and the United States.

As a seaman I was much impressed with the American fleet as it lay at anchor off Annapolis. Its appearance, the smartness of the officers and the discipline of the men all gave evidence that the vessels were in the highest state of efficiency. And equally impressive was the review.

ciency. And equally impressive was the review of the cadets, which showed the thoroughness of their training and the magnificent esprit de corps that prevails there.

I had long looked forward to knowing the President, and he was good enough to give me that opportunity at dinner at the White House on Saturday. I was greatly impressed with his strong personality, his intellectual strength, his comprehensive knowledge, his democracy, but at the same time his dignity. He looks what he is—the masterful ruler of a masterful people, determined, courageous, bold. I am only sorry that I cannot see and know more of an extraordinery as well as a very charming man.

that I cannot see and know more of an extraor-dinary as well as a very charming man.

The simplicity, but at the same time the dig-nity, at the White House was very pleasing. It was exactly the house and the surroundings that one conceives to be in keeping with republican institutions. There was neither extravagance nor but everything was in such quiet taste and so perfectly arranged that it was de-lightful. I shall always remember with pleas-ure my dinner at the White House and the very interesting conversation I enjoyed with the

This is the first time, I believe, that a British This is the first time, I believe, that a British admiral has been received by the President at Washington. Now I should like to see an American President received by the King in London. Such a meeting would be peculiarly appropriate, as both the King and President Roosevelt have rendered such distinguished scrvices to the cause of the world's peace. I am sure nothing would give greater pleasure to the British people than to welcome the President of the American Republic on British soil.

I look forward with great interest to the din-

I look forward with great interest to the dinner in New-York, at which three thousand American and British bluejackets will sit down, and to which I have been invited. The dinner is given by the enlisted men of the American navy to our sallors; it is paid for by the American can sailors out of their own pockets, and proves. I think, perhaps more than anything else, the really strong liking the men of the two navies

Sir Mortimer Durand, British Ambassador, will go to Annapolis to-morrow and will be the guest of Prince Louis on board his flagship, the Drake. In the afternoon the prince will make a trip to Baltimore, where he will be the guest of the British consul at dinner. On Wednesday the prince will make a thorough inspection of the Naval Academy, be the guest of Rear Admiral Brownson, commanding the armored cruiser division, and under escort of Admiral wnson's division will sail for New-York on

THE DRAMA.

MISS ADAMS AT THE EMPIRE.

"Peter Pan."

Again the nimble kitten and the ball of yarn. Miss Maude Adams appeared last night at the Empire Theatre, acting a conspicuous part in Mr. Barrie's fantastic fairy play, called "Peter Pan," and winning the cheer of a warm welcome from a large audience. The presence of this actress affords pleasure to many persons, for the sufficient reason that it is a sprightly presence, indicative of sweetness and mirth, and graced by the allure ment of pretty ways. As an actress Miss Adams is incarnate mediocrity-for she possesses neither imagination, passion, power, depth of feeling or formidable intellect, and her faculty of expressive impersonation is extremely limited; but, as a personality, she is piquant, interesting and agreeable, and, in such a play as "Peter Pan," which is an amiable fabric of whim and fancy, devised for the amusement of children, she is shown to advantage and she causes the good effect of commingled merriment, sentiment and momentary thought. The drift of Mr. Barrie's play,-in so far as it has any drift,—is toward reflection on escape, such as fancy provides, from the weariness of the careworn world. This clever author seems to have had Miss Adams in mind when he was writing this play, and to have discerned in her those attributes innocence, sprightliness, half-joyful, half-rueful sentiment and piquant singularity which have endeared her to a considerable public,—the admirers of "The Little Minister,"—in making the part of Peter Pan, he certainly has fitted this ideal of the woman. The result is a vivacious, wandering, partly pantomimic, composition,-more an idyl of childhood than a play, a little in the spirit of Drake's "Culprit Fay,"—and a good performance by Miss Adams, somewhat in the vein of her Lady Babbie, as to grotesquerie, pleasantry, impuls and vim, but by no means so in substance, so pleasing in quality, or so decisive in effect. Miss Adams reached her zenith in the play of "The Little Minister," and nothing that she has since done has in any way modified the impression then imparted of her abilities and her nature. She is popular, and, being one of the few good influences now operant on the stage, her professional prosperity (although she has been extravagantly and foolishly overrated), is at once a gratification and an encouragement, because it is creditable to that public intelligence and taste without which the theatre must, inevitably, degenerate into a nuisance and a curse. The story of 'Peter Pan" has been several times told in this place, and iteration of its details would be tiresome. No writer has ever handled fairles or fairy fancies as Pope handled them, in "The Rape of the Lock," or as Southey handled them, in the beautiful, much undervalued epic poem of "The Curse of Kehama"; but Mr. Barrie has managed them well,-his play being flexible in construction, fluent in style, and abundant in ridiculous incident. The phantasy sometimes runs into puerlity, and the representatives of Peter Pan and his juvenile comrades, and the pirates and Indians have difficulty in throwing themselves into the spirit of the theme and maintaining the illusion. They do measurably succeed, however, and the achievement is creditable to them. The spectators appeared to be amused and gratified. As Goldsmith wrote: By sports like these are all their cares beguiled; The sports of children satisfy the child.

MR. MANTELL AT THE GARDEN.

"Hamlet."

Mr. Mantell's impersonation of Hamlet has been seen before now, and it is not unknown, Last night It was disclosed to a considerable and kindly audience, at the Garden Theatre. There may be, somewhere on earth, an actor who can impersonate Hamlet, as that character stands in Shakespeare's sublime tragedy; but, if so, he has not yet revealed himself. Two actors, within the last fifty years, have risen to the height of that great inellectual, imaginative creation,-Edwin Booth and Henry Irving. They are dead and gone, and the part has died with them. Mr. Mantell is an actor of respectable talent and ample experience,-which however, does not seem to have done him much good. His performance of Hamlet is a careful, and in some trifling respects commendable, effort in a strictly conventional vein. But Hamlet requires a combination of attributes and faculties that Mr. Mantell does not possess,—some of them being spirituality of temperament, imagination, distinction, refinement, feeling, grace, repose, intellectual supremacy, and a copious variety of expressive power. To all these things this actor is a complete stranger. He has plenty of voice, but does not know how to use it. His elecution was exeerable. His demeanor and gesture were absurd. He spoke soliloquy (which is thinking aloud) as if addressing a public assembly, and, at various times, leaped like the wild gazelle on Judah's hills. nor a Hamlet is not an acrobat stump erator. It would be a waste of time to discuss such a performance. There is no more of Hamlet in Robert Mantell than there is of milk in a male tiger. The part of Hamlet will be played from time to time, and the various experiments on it, as they come along, must be viewed with whatever patience can be maintained. Mr. Mantell is announced for "Macbeth,"-another instance of professional temerity. But this is a strange time. The awful intimation has been published that Mr. E. H. Sothern will present himself as King Lear! Perhaps Mr. Fortesque would favor the public with "Arlel"; or Mr. James T. Powers come on for "Miranda." There are great possibilities in this direction.

MR. GREET AND HIS PLAYERS.

Mendelssohn Hall.

Mr. Ben Greet continues his ministrations at the Mendelssohn Hall, where, last night, he presented "Much Ado About Nothing," and tried to act Benedick. Mr. Greet is engaged in showing "Shakespeare's Plays in Elizabethan Manner'-as he un derstands it. The Elizabethan manner of presenting plays, as described by Payne Collier and other trustworthy authorities, must have been exceed-ingly tiresome; but observation of it, as it is approximately and drearly shown by Mr. Greet and proximately and dreamly shown by air. Greet and his company, will, perhaps, edify students of that subject. Plays have been much better presented within the last twenty-five years than they ever were in the time of "Eliza and our James"; but there are persons who think that too much attention is given to scenery and too much stress placed on embellishment, and such persons will rejoice in the proceedings of Mr. Greet. This manager has underlined "The Merchant of Venice" (which is beoming hackneyed and ought to be allowed a period of repose), "Macbeth," and "Julius Cæsar"-all to be produced within the next two weeks. Mr. Greet's season will extend to November 25. value of his productions, in so far as they have exclusively educational-although, any value, is when Miss Mathison was a member of his company, his presentment of "Everyman" had intrinsic force and meaning, however archaic and sombre that singular work may have seemed to be. The hall WILLIAM WINTER.

NOTES OF THE STAGE.

James J. Corbett, who is appearing this week at Proctor's Fifty-eighth Street vaudeville theatre, wants to play Bill Sykes at the Fifth Avenue Theatre next week. He is going to understudy the acto east for the part, and at one performance during the week—the date is not set yet—he will play the role. He says the part has always been his ambi-tion "since he became an actor."

Crace George, in the dramatization of Mrs Humphry Ward's book "The Marriage of William Ashe," will be the next attraction at the Garrick Theatre, opening there on Monday, November 29. The play is at present in Philadelphia.

Previous to taking this place Mr. Tubby was in charge of the construction crews of the Great Northern Railroad, and it was in this connection that he attracted the attention of Mr. Stevens, This was when the road was building the great three mile tunnel through the Cascade Mountains, where Mr. Tubby exhibited great skill in the management of the work under Mr. Stevens.

OBITUARY.

STR GEORGE WILLIAMS.

London, Nov. 6 .- Sir George Williams, founder of the Young Men's Christian Association and president of its London headquarters for twenty years, died to-day. He was born in 1821.

Sir George Williams was the son of a farmer, and his early years were spent in a farmhouse in the parish of Dulverton, Somersetshire. In youth his attention was directed to religious affairs, and the parish of Dulverton, Somersetshire. In youth his attention was directed to religious affairs, and in 1837 he underwent conversion at Bridgewater. He was then a clerk, and in 1841 he entered the service of the drygoods firm of George Hitchcock & Co. in London as junior assistant.

In 1843 he was influential in inducing some of the other employes of the firm to join with him in holding a prayer meeting at stated intervals, On June 6, 1844, twelve persons, of whom young Williams was one, formed themselves into a society under the name of the Young Men's Christian Association. Mr. Williams was chiefly instrumental in originating the society, which, from small beginning, extended until it encircled the civilized world. Mr. Williams was active throughout alf the rest of his life in promoting its progress. From the original organization of drygoods clerks the society spread to other young men in London, and then throughout the United Kingdom and to other countries. The first on this continent were started in Boston and Montreal in 1851, seven years after the start in London, and forty more were formed in three years. The first of the annual British conferences was held in 1888, and the first association building was crected in 1868.

From 1863 to 1885 Mr. Williams was the treasurer of the organization, and in 1885 he became president. His business career had been crowned with success, and he became head of the firm of Hitchcock, Williams & Co., warehousemen. In 1894 he was knighted by Queen Victoria for his services to the world. He was married in 1853 to Miss Helen Hitchcock. Besides being president of the Band of Hope Union. His home was in Russell Square, London.

WILLIAM J. LE MOYNE.

William J. Le Moyne, one of the oldest actors in the country, died early yesterday morning at the home of a friend at Inwood-on-the-Hudson, of Bright's disease and heart trouble. His second wife, Sarah Cowell Le Moyne, was at his side.

Mr. Le Moyne has not appeared on the stage since his engagement with James K. Hackett in "Don Cæsar's Return," four years ago, because of failing health. For the better part o' his life before that time, however, he had been a prominent stage figure. During the latter half of his stage career he was a member of the Union Square, Duly's and the Lyceum stock companies in this city, and became, justly, a favorite. He was a sound and capable actor, trained thoroughly in the stock company school and under such famous stars as Booth, Forrest and Fechter. He was willing and able to take a wide variety of parts, and, although he was master of a certain unctuous although he was master of a certain unctuous abumor, and liked best to play such old men parts as Dick Phenyl and Deacon Hoggard, where he could also indulge in a little pathos and a little emotional stress. He never sought to trade on his peculiar ability nor allow it to marrow his range of usefulness. 'Don Cæsar's Return," four years ago, because of

mr. Le Moyne was born in Boston, of French extraction. In 1831. He began his stage career in Portland twenty-one years later. He was playing at the Howard Atheneum in Boston when the Civil War broke out, and he at once enlisted in the 28th Massachusetts Volunteers. He rose to the rank of captain, and fought till a severe wound at South Mountain forced his retirement. After his recovery he again resumed his profession as an actor, continuing it till his illness four years ago. It is said that he played at one time or another every male part in "Hamlet" except that of the Dane himself and Laertes. He was prominent in "Saints and Sinners," of course in "Sweet Lavender," and in many other of the Jones and Pinero comedies which made the old Lyceum Theatre such a delightful place of amusement. His range is thus seen to have been wide, his mind agile and able to keep abreast of the times, and 'adaptable to the changes in taste. He was one of those well rounded players that are becoming so rare, and his death marks vividly their decrease. Le Moyne was born in Boston, of French ex-

Clinton, Iowa, Nov. 6.—A real estate agent here has received an offer of $15,500 for the property on which stands the famous Tom Sawyer cave, near Hannibal, Mo. The offer was made by Henry Blossom, of St. Louis, a playwright, who formerly lived in Hannibal, Mark Twain's old home. A matter of the Hannibal, Mark Twain's old home. A matter of 20 acres is involved. The cave is one of the natural wonders of Missouri.

Rome, Nov. 6.—Ernesto Biondi, the sculptor, in connection with his lawsuit against the trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, in New-York, for refusing to exhibit his group, "The Saturnalia," has addressed a letter to Secretary Root, who acted as counsel for the trustees, in which he says he wishes to invoke an act of justice. He expresses the hope that Mr. Root will win a great victory over "self" in reconsidering, as Secretary of State, the judgment, which Blondi calls missaken and cruel, and he proposes that Mr. Root, being no longer the counsel of his adversaries, and therefore and nobler mission of safeguarding the public interest, should act as sole arbitre between himself and the museum, as now, through his expression of the matter of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, in New-York, for refusing to exhibit his group, "The Saturnalia," has addressed a letter to Secretary Root, who acted as counsel for the trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, in New-York, for refusing to exhibit his group, "The Saturnalia," has addressed a letter to Secretary Root, who acted as counsel for the trustees, in which he says he wishes to invoke an act of justice. Walter G. Tubby To Be Superin- Woman Who Shot Mrs. Morgan Wants To Be Vindicated.

[By Telegraph to The Tribune.] St. Paul, Nov. 6.—"I will return to New-York, and St. Paul, Nov. 6.—"I will return to New-York, and even face imprisonment in the Tombe, so that my name and that of my boy may be cleansed of the stain which now besmirches it." This was the statement which Mrs. Beatrice Young, of Winona, made to Governor Johnson to-day, when she applied to him for a letter to District Attorney Jerome requesting him to give her a trial.

Mrs. Young, who married a cousin of "Cæsar" Young, shot at Mrs. Catherine Morgan on August 19 at the Hotel Imperial, in New-York, because she had reason to believe that she was her husband's paramour.

Mrs. Young has sought legal advice as to whether she could be legally banished from New-York. The attorneys answered in the negative. She wishes to return and be tried, as she believes that no jury will convict her for defending the honor of her family.

CARNEGIE INSTITUTION'S PLANS.

Two Important Scientific Expeditions To Be Sent Out Next Year.

Washington, Nov. 6.-The executive committee of the Carnegie Institution met te-day to consider the annual budget, and will meet occasionally until December 12 to select applicants for aid in re-searches and prepare recommendations to the board of trustees.

It is practically certain that next year the institution will devote itself to two undertakings of immense value to science. One of these will be an expedition into West and East Turkestan and Mongoila. A large expedition will be formed, under the leadership of Dr. Pumpelly, of Harvard University. The other enterprise will be to continue the magnetic survey of the North Pacific Ocean. The institution's ship, the Galilee, will go to the Aleutian Islands, the Japanese waters, the coast of China and the South Sea Islands.

FORGER CONVERTED AT REVIVAL.

[By Telegraph to The Tribune.] Pittsburg, Nov. 6,—Charles M. Oldham, of Boston, a forger and embezzler, who has been a firstat a revival here last night, and to-day surren-dered himself to the police. He was once wealthy, but has recently been washing windows for a liv-ing. He has dodged the law from Maine to Cali-fornia. tive from justice for eight years, was converted
